INWARD ACTIVISM AND OUTWARD PRAYER

How does God's nonviolent Presence within empower us for non-violent relationship with self, others, and the larger political world?

We are called to lives of faithful witness, yet we often find ourselves burdened with conflicting theological and psychological ideas; we are confronted with a confusing array of spiritual practices, and our energies are drained by multiple and competing demands for political action. We wonder if all these voices will ever be able to sing in harmony.

Come and explore the transformative power of nonviolence for personal and political life. Nonviolence can inform us theologically, psychologically, spiritually, and politically, as we move from systems of domination and control toward relational systems that invite integration. Join us for a time of theoretical and experiential sharing as we explore how different the world looks when viewed through a nonviolent lens.

This is a workshop for activists who want to deepen their inward life; for contemplatives who want to witness more actively in the world; and for people who feel burdened by the world's problems and needs and want to have a clearer sense of their own witness.
